Instructions

As in the tradition of haute couture catwalks and magazines, an effective shop window must display items in such a way that engenders customers' aspirations to lead a certain lifestyle and consequently stimulate their desire to purchase the merchandise. Financial success may also depend on how frequently the window display is altered, as this will encourage customers to regularly enter the shop to inspect new stock. It may also induce an anxiety that the pieces may be removed imminently and thereby increase customer spending, as well as catch the attention of passers by because a constantly evolving window display suggests something exciting is happening. The display items should be large and bright in colour to ensure that they are visible from a distance and a themed window (e.g. Christmas) often improves sales considerably. A common drawback of placing items in a shop window is that they are more liable to be stolen.

Verbal Reasoning test: Question 2 of 30

There is potential for shops to sell more when customers believe that merchandise will only be available briefly.
