Still, the thing with unhelpful teacher talk is that it can leak out in many small, often unnoticed, ways. When added up, these leaks can diminish the quality of the learning experience, giving students less breathing space to practise the language in the classroom. And it’s not only new teachers who have this tendency. All language teachers can get into the habit of talking too much in ...

My year 6 teacher had an interesting way of assessing our reading skills: during the daily afternoon silent reading, he’d talk to us individually, ask us about the book we’d chosen, and get us to read a few paragraphs from it, while he sat beside us and took notes, and asked us questions about what we’d read. The classroom had a very high ceiling; when he moved from one child to another, he ...
