The Craft of Stickmaking by Leo Gowan - Goodreads

Stickmaking, the production of canes or walking sticks, is a popular traditional craft in Britain. Some sticks feature elaborate carvings or fancy materials while others are more functional. Gowan, a founding member and former chair of the British Stickmakers' Guild, guides readers through the production of a stick, from the selection and harvest of wood through assembly, decoration, and finishing. Several designs are considered some from one piece of wood and others that are ...

The Craft of stick making. Horn handles. Here in north Wales, our native Welsh mountain sheep are widespread on the mountains and rams produce a beautiful honey-coloured horn which although not particularly big has enough length to work excellent handles and market sticks from. This is perfect for the traditional shepherds crook and occasionally I might acquire a horn large enough to carve a ...

This has been supported by an increasing number of large country shows and fairs where there is an ever increasing interest in sticks and the craft of making them. The majority of those making sticks now do so as a hobby with the desire to keep an ancient craft alive and pass on skills and knowledge to the wider public. These aims have been supported since 1984 by the

It's not quite as good as Stick Making, a Complete Course. There are no pictures of the various trees used, but he gives a good description about how and where to get good stick material. The latter book is more complete, however, listing sources for suppliers. The former does have an appendix of tips, a chapter on judging, and directions for assembling a ring-horn cane (Horn Disc Sticks). In all other respects, I'd say The Craft of Stickmaking is equal to the latter in information, interest ...
